after careful reading of the review, I believe that it is not ready for publication in its present condition. In fact, although the argument is of interest, the review is confused and it is difficult to really understand the clinical usefulness of alkaline phosphatase determination. Reading a review should give clear and concise take home messages, which indeed are difficult to obtain from the present review. Therefore, I would suggest that the Authors resubmit a new revision including key information's and more practical clinical suggestions.

I send you a new edited revision of my Manuscript, “Alkaline Phosphatase Isoenzymes and Leukocyte Alkaline Phosphatase Score in Patients with Acute and Chronic Disease: A Brief Review”, including a restructured content.
